

Alyson is a wife, mother, taxpayer, and educator. She, her husband, and their four children reside on their farm with their cows, pigs, goats, horses, rabbits, chickens, and sheep in Hilliard. Alyson was raised in Nassau county. At age fifteen started working at St. John's Seafood and then Turn 4 wings in Hilliard all through high school and college. She continued working adding UPS for five years in logistics as a second job to cover expenses, graduating debt free from college. Alyson has coached little league, school sports, and served as the Parliamentary Procedure coach for the past five years

Her passion for civil engagement and community involvement stretches from land conservation to sustainability, and everything in between. Alyson is a graduate of West Nassau High school, a scholar student at the University of North Florida and has spent more than a decade as a public educator here in our county. Aly, as her friends and family call her, has every part of herself invested in the county's future.

The Founding Fathers believed the purpose of government was to protect our "inalienable rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Government was not meant to guarantee the outcomes of our efforts, nor support and restrict us from cradle to grave. I am looking forward to serving the citizens of Nassau.
